

TUGSA: Sexual Harassment Officer

Despite the resources that Temple University offers concerning sexual harassment and assault, graduate students often fall through the cracks. That's where the Sexual Harassment Officer comes in.

The SHO is a resource for students about sexual harassment, serving as both an educator and advocate and is available for concerns relating to workplace or classroom harassment, as well as incidents that occur off campus.

Need help getting information or assistance with academic or counseling services?

Interested in filing a report?

Just want someone to talk to?

Contact Ariel Natalo-Lifton, the Sexual Harassment Officer for TUGSA:

ariel.natalo-lifton@tugsa.org

Contact Ariel Natalo-Lifton
ariel.natalo-lifton@tugsa.org

Sexual Harassment Resources for Graduate Students

Sponsored by TUGSA: Temple University Graduate Students' Association

What is sexual harassment?

In their lifetime, about 81% of women and 43% of men will experience sexual harassment.

According to the EEOC, 25% of women and 10% of men have experienced sexual harassment in the workplace.

In academia, this number more than doubles: 58% of women and 23% of men report harassment by faculty, staff, or students in the workplace.

We want to help.

The law defines sexual harassment as a form of discrimination.

It can include unwanted sexual advances, sexual intimidation, verbal and physical harassment, stalking/cyberstalking, explicit emails or texts, etc.

It does not have to be sexual, however, and can include any harassment on the basis of gender or sex.

Resources at Temple University

Tuttleman Counseling
(215) 204-7276

Student Health Services
(215) 204-7500

Wellness Resource Center
(215) 204-8436

Title IX Office
(Andrea Caporale Seiss)
(215) 204-3283

Women Organized Against Rape (WOAR Hotline)
(215) 985-3333

For more information on Temple University policy, visit: <https://sexualmisconduct.temple.edu/policies/sexual-harassment>